The Nevada rancher who forced the federal Bureau of Land Management to back down last week may have been targeted because a Chinese solar company with ties to Sen. Harry Reid's son wants the land for an energy plant, several websites report.

A report on Godfatherpolitics.com, says Chinese energy giant ENN Energy Group wants to use federal land as part of its effort to build a $5 billion solar farm and panel-building plant in the southern Nevada desert. Rory Reid, the son of Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, is representing ENN in their efforts to locate in Nevada.

Part of the land ENN wants to use was purchased from Clark County at well below appraised value. Rorv Reid is the former Clark County Commission

In addition to the county acreage, the federal Bureau of Land Management at one time was looking at BLM property under dispute with cattle rancher Cliven Bundy. The BLM is headed by former Harry Reid senior policy adviser Neil Kornz.

According to BizPac Review, BLM documents indicate that the federal property for which Bundy claims grazing rights were under consideration by a solar energy company. Those documents have since been removed from BLM's website, but BizPac quotes from one of them:

"Non-Governmental Organizations have expressed concern that the regional mitigation strategy for the Dry Lake Solar Energy Zone utilizes Gold Butte as the location for offsite mitigation for impacts from solar development, and that those restoration activities are not durable with the presence of trespass cattle."

"Trespass cattle" is a reference to Bundy's herd. Bundy's family has grazed cattle on the land since the 1870s, and Bundy maintains he has grazing rights to the federal land. But he hasn't paid his federal grazing fees in 20 years in a dispute with the BLM.

BLM agents hired contract cowboys earlier this year to seize hundreds of head of cattle and were moving in to seize the rest when militia members from across the country and other supporters showed up last week.

Citing a dangerous situation, the BLM backed off its efforts and returned Bundy's cattle Saturday, but it has vowed to continue fighting him in court and administratively.

In its effort to get Bundy off the land, it has attempted to get him to reduce his 1,000-head herd to 150, The Blaze's Dana Loesch reports. Bundy says his ranch would not be viable with a herd that small.

The BLM claims a need to control grazing on the land to protect an endangered desert tortoise. But Loesch and others note that in August, the tortoise population in a nearby conservation center was set to be euthanized because of underfunding.

denied those reports, saying that only unhealthy tortoises would be euthanized and others would be relocated. But KVVU-TV in Las Vegas reported that the agency didn't say how many of the tortoises in its care were deemed "healthy."

Further, Loesch reports, Harry Reid pressured the BLM to change the tortoise's protected zone to accommodate developer Harvey Whittemore, one of the Democrat's top donors. Whittemore was convicted in May 2013 of making illegal campaign contributions to him.

"BLM has proven that they've a situational concern for the desert tortoise as they've had no problem waiving their rules concerning wind or solar power development," Loesch writes.

"Clearly, these developments have vastly affected a tortoise habitat more than a century-old, quasi-homesteading grazing area. If only Clive Bundy were a big Reid donor."

What is going on in DC? Does no one have any integrity left? Reid uses his position in a way that should earn him a ticket to prison.

Mauna Pablo · 2 years ago

Google the LA Times story in 2003 on Harry Reid, and it will make you doubt that Harry Reid has ever had any integrity. He has been swinging deals to his sons, his son -in-law and even bought gifts for friends in the capitol from his Grand daughter who was selling trinkets she made. He paid $17,000 for the trinkets, then bought another $16,000 worth from her. He paid for them out of campaign contributions but denied the

ner. He paid for them out of campaign contributions but repaid the $17,000 when he got caught. Don't know if he repaid the $16,000. He should be investigated by the Congressional committee and kicked out of office. He is tied to gambling in Las Vegas, mining, and all sorts of companies and people who give him campaign contributions (and hire his sons and son-in-law for big bucks) and those contributions keep him in office. He is a scum bag. Read the story on Google LA times in 2003.

In baseball, three strikes and you're out! Too bad they don't apply that to Reid. We used to call him Dingy Harry, sort of in reference to Clint Eastwood's "Dirty Harry" character. To not insult the Dirty Harry character, we should just call Harry Reid "Filthy Harry."

yes , and un-Godly and any other adverse label you care to apply. The mushy mouthed worthless outlaw is a sorry excuse for leadership of anything . And the democrats chose this thing to "lead" their party as the champion of "change?" Surely there aren't enough illegals , cemetery voters and "I voted for all 7 people in my house" type --to keep this corrupt gang operating in our Nation. If that isn't the case --- then possibly history will chalk this system up as a failed experiment of so called self rule. and the demonic socialists will have accomplished their goal . God forgive our Nation's failures , and deliver us from these evil ones. Yea hiding in a five star hotel suite in DC. Something wrong when these paupers we elect to congress leave a millionaires. Maybe pass a law they can't increase their net worth to any amount higher than it was when they took office. Especially on the DEM side, they love taxing the rich so much if they're worth more money than what they had when they took office, they can write a check the the treasury to get rid of their ill gotten gain.

So hm I know some folks are pro death penalty in USA ( personally I can not understand how these people think) but exactly why should he be hung?

4 ^ | v • Share >

Ken → Swedude • 2 years ago

Sweetdude, you know how when people are dead, they do not know it, but it hurts those around them? It's exactly the same with stupid people.

BTW, stealing cattle is an offense punishable by hanging. Since Harry Reid is pulling strings to sell the land through his son, while using a government agency to take cattle from Mr. Bundy, in effect stealing his cattle, Harry Reid is a cattle thief. But don't you worry, since you aren't capable of cognitive thought process, we will just bear the pain of your stupidity. When someone hurts you or someone you care about in a way that is irreversible, you might understand how your feelings on death penalty will immediately change. But as with all idiots/liberals, it doesn't happen quickly or through the capability of a logical thought process, hence your political views are what they are. Sad but true.

Horse thieves and cattle thieves were commonly hanged in the West, and some states still have hanging as an acceptable sentence - just as some states still have a "firing squad" as an acceptable sentence. If Harry Reid and his son had pulled this trick in the 1800's they would both be hanging from a tree right now.

Capital offences in the United States may bring a death penalty for one of several reasons. The most common is the idea that the criminal in question cannot be "redeemed" and returned to society. It's the same logic with requires the euthanasiation of a rabid animal: they can't be cured, will never be safe, and will never be happy.

One other philosophy of thought on the death penalty is held by people like myself: I believe incarceration for life, without any chance of parole, in a permanent solitary confinement, constitutes cruel and unusual punishment. If a person is so dangerous, so hateful, so incapable of controlling themselves - or so filled with remorse that they cannot face themselves - then it is kinder to put them out of their misery than force them to live without simple, human contact.

Your understanding is not required.

believing in something that you can not prove is true. The word for that is not Schizophrenia. If it was you just labeled
